"VOICES OF DISSENT"

ABOUT THE SPEAKER

Professor Romila Thapar is a professor emerita at the Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi. She is a preeminent scholar of ancient history. Her scholarly contributions to social and cultural history of ancient India are among the most authoritative sources of academic scholarship for the subject. She has also received honorary doctorates from esteemed institutions such as the Brown University, University of Oxford, University of Calcutta and so forth, for her understanding of the society, economy and religion in ancient India along with her study on historiography involving modern perspectives of writing and recording of history of ancient India.

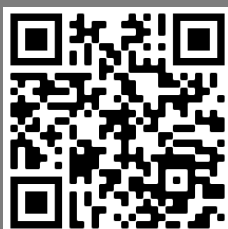

The books authored by Professor Thapar, latest of which are "Voices of Dissent: An Essay", "On Citizenship" and "The Public Intellectual in India", have added immensely to the study of the relationship between history and society with respect to India. Prof. Thapar's contribution to academic literature has inspired academicians and intellectuals towards the exploration of the respective subjects.

Prof. Thapar will be speaking in her personal capacity. Her remarks should not be attributed to any institution to which she may be professionally affiliated.
